A Beauty

MAYBE YOU KNOW HER AS JILL FOSTER, a calculating, self-centered beauty on the popular CBS TV daytime drama, "The Young And The Restless." The real-life Deborah Adair, a stunning 5' 7" blue-eyed brunette will be Grand Marshal in the Railroad Festival Parade in October.

On Appomattox's Main Street

Group seeks depot mini-mall

By BILL SHERROD

A group of Appomattox residents appeared before the town's Mayor and Council Monday night to advocate transformation of the Main Street railroad depot into a downtown mini-mall.

Shirley Walton, speaking on behalf of the group, noted that several persons have expressed the desire to locate businesses in the railroad building, which was given to the town by the Norfolk and Western Railroad.

At present, there are two businesses in the building, according to Walton. The business, an arts and crafts store and a fabric outlet, have met with favorable response since they opened, according to Walton.

She said that the types of businesses which would be located in the building would be compatible with the mini-mall concept. These businesses would range from an antiques store to a cake-and-craft shop, and possibly a small restaurant.

Walton, a VPI extension agent, noted that the extension service would be "more than willing" to devote time and effort to seeing the project get off the ground. She added that similar projects have been suggested in the past, but none have come to fruition.

Walton said these would be year-round businesses, and could help attract increased business to the downtown area. She noted that the downtown mini-mall concept has worked well in other places, such as Bristol.

Councilmen agreed to study the proposal, and referred the idea to the town's property committee.

Councilmembers also heard a presentation by Clarence Stine, of the Appomattox Health Department, regarding the proposed town ordinance requiring restaurants to install grease-trap devices to prevent clogging of the town's sewer lines.

Stine noted that the ordinance could place considerable financial burden on local restaurants, since installation costs for certain types of grease traps can run into thousands of dollars.

Town Manager Bill Britton noted that various new types of grease traps have been developed that can be placed beneath a sink, rather than beneath the ground outside the restaurant building. He said that these filters would likely be less expensive for the restaurants.

Henry Wright, owner of the John Mosby Inn Restaurant, told the council members that he is "dead set" against any ordinance that would require installation of a grease trap. Wright said he believes that the problem of grease-clogged sewer lines could be solved by more careful disposal practices in restaurants, and use of solvent chemicals.

Stine told the council that he will write to the National Sanitation Foundation for information regarding newer types of grease traps which could solve the town's sewer line problem and would not pose an unreasonable financial burden for local restaurants.

Council also requested Vic Bosiger to look into the possibility of adding the Christian Broadcasting Network, WGN out of Chicago and a station which serves Raleigh-Durham, N. C., to the town's cable system. Bosiger is manager of Nesbe Cable Satellite Communications, Inc., the parent company of Appomattox Cable Television, Inc.

Bosiger said that he believes adding these stations will present no problem to the Appomattox system, and added that he would study the request and have the stations added to the Appomattox system if feasible.

Patrick Henry Boys Plantation

Satellite home idea explored in county

A group of community leaders met with officials of the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation last Tuesday to discuss the possibility of locating a satellite home in Appomattox County.

Robert W. McCullough, executive director of the Patrick Henry Boys' Plantation, explained that the number of qualified applicants for residence on the PHBP facility is exceeding the facility's capacity.

In the last 18 months, approximately 100 applications for residency have been made. In the past 12 months, only 12 vacancies have come open, and all have been filled.

The PHBP facility in Brookneal places children from broken homes in an environment which emphasizes home and family. The children live in a home on the facility property, under the care of house parents.

McCullough stressed that these children are not delinquents, but boys whose home life has fallen apart.

Five counties in this area are being surveyed as possible sites for a new facility location, according to McCullough. A tract of no less than 50 acres would be required on which to build the facility, he added.

A satellite facility such as the one being proposed would provide a home for 12 boys, according to McCullough. As at the Brookneal facility, these children would live under the supervision of house parents.

Bill Jamerson, chairman of the board of directors of the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation, notes that the "board has adopted a policy of conducting a survey to determine the feasibility of operating a satellite home.

"At this stage, we're just looking for feedback from the counties in which the facility might be located," Jamerson adds. He notes that funding for this facility would be entirely private.

A community must be receptive to the satellite home concept because an important part of the character-building process is the sense of "community belonging" which PBHP seeks to instill in its children, according to Jamerson.

"The idea is for the community to accept the children," Jamerson says, "for them to blend right into the schools, clubs, and other parts of the community."

At Tuesday's meeting, McCullough pointed out that the increased demand for this type of facility -- and the resulting search for a suitable satellite home location -- stems from a variety of factors, ranging from the breakdown of the traditional family unit to cutbacks in federal funding of social programs.

J. Franklin Vaughan, chairman of the Appomattox County Board of Supervisors, said this week that he is "very much in favor" of the satellite home concept.

Vaughan, who attended last Tuesday's meeting along with other county and town officials, said that he had discussed the idea with government, church and civic leaders and gotten "all positive feedback."

"I and everyone I've talked to feel that the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation is doing an excellent job in Brookneal, and would welcome such a facility in Appomattox County," Vaughan concluded.

ROBERT W. McCULLOUGH, executive director of the Patrick Henry Boys Plantation in Brookneal, was in Appomattox last week to discuss the possibility of locating a satellite home in this county. McCullough (standing, above) noted that the number of applicants for residence at the Brookneal facility has exceeded the facility's capacity. McCullough met with community leaders here to try and determine how the community would respond to a PHBP satellite home, and according to Appomattox County Board of Supervisors Chairman J. Franklin Vaughan, initial response to the idea has been "very favorable."

Greetings from Martha Street. Written on a dry Monday, the thirteenth. Hope it rains ere you read this, but I have found consolation in the fact that most every morning there is a heavy dew. Not as helpful as rain, but better than dust. About time for farmers to do fall plowing. And, gee, that spot of red in my flower garden spotted from the Den window turned out to be a seven inch bloom on an Hawaiian hibiscus. Could not resist bringing it indoors, although lasts only one day that way. Apple harvest is under way. A friend brought me a new nursery catalog. I am in a minority around town in that I do not have any forsythia, so may order several. Ah yes, there is great reward in for the spirit and the flesh in outdoor use of time. If'n there is a Yellow Rose of Texas, that would be a prize

Sorry to hear of the recent death of the Rev. William M. Latta. He died in Wilmington, N.C. August 12. He was vicar at St. Anne's church here 1967-1972. He was also a volunteer fireman. Mrs. Latta died last year.

Always a good football game when the ACHS Raiders meet the Nelson County High School. They meet here Friday night.

The "doubleheader" is a fixture in baseball. Why not try it in football? The average college and/or professional squad has upwards of 75 players on the squad. Many of them see little or no playing time. Would fans support watching two games? Sure, they see two or more on TV. I will concede opinions would differ on this.

Have a note on the pad by my desk. Says: "We could use another "Amos 'n Andy".

Appomattox survived the War Between the States, the Great Depression, and as of Wednesday has survived my living here for fifty-one years. Would suit me to stay around another fifty-one.

'Sox' squads to meet

By FRANCES PAULETTE

In the 1940's Appomattox County and baseball went together like 'love and marriage', 'the horse and carriage'. And, everybody, but everybody, went out to see the two favorite baseball teams, The Green Sox and The Red Sox play ball. According to former fans and players, it was, without a doubt, baseball at it's best!

On Saturday night, September 18, there will be a kind of re-run of baseball in Appomattox as it was in the forties. The event will be held in the Appomattox Ballpark with proceeds going to the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Game time is 7:30, however, all former members of either team who would like to participate are asked to be at the ball park promptly at 6 p.m.

How many of you remember these two teams? The Green Sox was owned by Appomattox County native, John C. Caldwell. It was part of the Skyline League.

The Red Sox was a group of locals who loved baseball; the team had its beginning when Ed Tegethoff, an Appomattox resident at that time, got the group together for some baseball fun.

"We loved to play baseball," said one former player, still residing in Appomattox. "We didn't get any salary, we just played because we loved it. If we ever made any money after expenses, we divided it up.

When Mr. Tegethoff left town, the late John Oxford took over as manager and did an excellent job."

The Red Sox was part of the Patrick Henry League in the beginning and later became associated with the Central Virginia League.

"Local merchants donated money for uniforms," commented another former player. "We were as proud as could be of our colors and equally proud of the names on the back of our uniforms advertising the businesses that so generously sponsored us."

Appomattox Mayor Ronald Spiggle remembers hearing about those ball games between the Green Sox and the Red Sox.

"It was in 1948 they had the play-off," said Spiggle. "I was only two years old but I remember hearing about that game from family and friends."

"Both the Red Sox and the Green Sox had played and remained undefeated for approximately 10 or 12 games that summer in '48. Local fans wanted the teams to have a three-game playoff. The games were played at the home field of the Green Sox which is now the town ball park."

"The games were played on Saturday afternoons when a good many of the local businesses would close during the summer months. The Red Sox won the first two games, 4-2 and 8-7, so there was no need for the third same according to the pre-arranged rules. But, some of the players thought there should have been another game, and I have heard about that play-off all my life," laughed Spiggle.

Edges Marshall in contest

Bohannon wins first

David Bohannon edged Steve Marshall in a tiebreaker to win last week's Times-Virginian Football Contest.

Bohannon and Marshall each missed accurately predicting the outcomes of three of the contest games, and Bohannon's score predictions in the two tiebreaker games -- Appomattox vs. Randolph-Henry and U.Va. vs. Navy -- were closer to the games' actual scores than Marshall's.

But it was close. Bohannon's predictions resulted in a score difference of 32 points, only two less than Marshall's differential of 34 points.

Curtis T. Mayberry, Sr., and Richard L. Phelps of Gladstone were also in the running, each accurately predicting the outcomes of all but four of the contest games.

A host of contestants were close, each missing five of the contest games. They were Neal Cole, Judy Marshall, Tim Marshall, Phillip Coleman, Deedy McCormick, and Mark Marshall.

Competition was keen among the 72 contestants who participated in the first week of the annual Times-Virginian football contest.

For his winning efforts, Bohannon will receive a check for $20 and a free chicken dinner from the Chicken Palace restaurant. Marshall will receive a check for $10 and a dinner from the Chicken Palace for his soothsaying expertise.

The football contest enters its second week with this issue of the Times-Virginian. Full details on the contest, game rules and prize information can be found inside this week's paper.
